

JULIA CHILD

Bon Appetit !

An invitation to enter Julia Child's television kitchen encouraged millions of reluctant cooks. Chef Julia Child perfected her cooking techniques in Paris, at the world-renowned Le Cordon Bleu culinary arts school. Then the engaging Southern Californian brought her mastery to television. "The French Chef," her 1960s Public Broadcast Services series, captivated American viewers, male and female.

There, as elsewhere, Child promoted skillful cooking as an honored profession, and as a career. Her books and teachings molded a generation of leading chefs. The kitchen where Americans admired "The French Chef" now resides in The Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.
